Treacherous travel. A massive winter storm glazes the nation's midsection in ice, making for dangerous and deadly driving on one of the busiest travel weekends of the year. And there is more storming weather in the forecast. Dillan is following it all. Brush with death. Dash cam video captures the harrowing moment. A speeding car slams into a disabled vehicle on the side of a highway, narrowly missing a Connecticut state trooper and two others. And Black Friday, a dud? Despite brisk sales, analysts saying the shopping holiday didn't live up to the hype this year. What changed and why you may find the best deals sitting at home in your pajamas, Today, Saturday November 28th 2015. From NBC news, this is Today, live from Studio 1A in Rockefeller Plaza. And welcome to Today, on this Saturday morning, I am Erica Hill.

Good morning, guys, we found a country girl, we found a country girl in the big city. So what part of the country are you from? NEWSINCE, Virginia. And what do you think of the buildings and everything we've got going on here? Pretty tall. Yeah, pretty tall. And you are a little small, so big city even taller. Anyway, let's take a look at the weather going on across the country where it is going warm one today. Still in the northeast, New York City close to 60 degrees, down thru Raleigh about 72. It is going to start to cool off thru Buffalo tomorrow, but high of 41 degrees. Boston drops back down into the 40s and then, the warm air settles into the southeast. And the rest of us will see temperatures little bit closer to average. Nebraska, though, still looking at temperatures near 32 degrees. But heavy rain thru eastern Texas and Arkansas where still another several inches of rain could lead to potential flooding. That's look at the weather across the country.

Dillan, Dryer is back with a look at the travel forecast. Yeah, this weekend is still a big travel weekend, especially as we go into Sunday. But today, we are looking for some rain that starts build into the northeast. But the heaviest of the rain is down thru the southern planes, also icing is an issue. But let's break this down for you today where showers and morning fog could lead to some moderate delays at the airport, so, though we are not seeing widespread delays right now. This is going to be a big trouble area along I-40 and I-20 thru Abilene and up in Oklahoma City where the ice is still falling. The freezing rain is falling. So it's making things very dangerous. Watch out for the overpasses too, because they freeze on the top and underneath. So makes it extra slippery. That on Sunday, it's more less the rain, that's the big story, but areas like Dallas and then, Houston, we could see some major delays because of the heavier rain. And then if you are travelling along I-64 will be wet, so just slow down little bit. You could run into some patch areas of dense fog. Elsewhere across the country for the rest of the weekend, we are looking for more snow to walk back into the Denver Area, also across the eastern Rockies. Ice again is our major concern down thru southern planes, and then Sunday, little bit of extra snow that could accumulate in the higher elevations, but rain won't be as heavy as today, but still making things little bit soggy for travelers on Sunday. That's look at the weather across the country. Now here is a pick out your window.
