Also this morning, we are learning more about mysterious illness striking American diplomats in China, The State Department is trying to figure out what's caused staffers there to suffer symptoms consistent with those still unexplained cases in Cuba. NBC's Chief Foreign Affairs correspondent Andrea Mitchell has more on all of this. Hey, Andria, good morning. Good morning to you Hoda.

The State Department has now evacuated some Americans from China and now issuing an expanded health alert for all of China as US officials fear that they are the victims of targeted soundwave attacks. In an email, American diplomat Mark Lensy tells NBC news, he first noticed the unexplained symptoms last year, working at this US consulate in WANJO China. He started hearing strange noises and getting headaches. Now he is one of several American staff and families, the State Department has evacuated. A health alert cites subtle and vague but abnormal sensations of sound and pressure.

"We are concerned about it. It's a serious medical incident" American diplomats now targeted in 2 countries. Officials say the mysterious incidents in China appeared to be the same syndrome that first struck 24 Americans at the US embassy in Havana last year where suffered symptoms to concussion or minor traumatic brain injury. US officials speculated Cuba or even Russia could be behind those strange attacks in Havana.

And now China is also under suspicion. These latest attacks coming less than a week before president Trump's nuclear summit with North Korea, a close China ally. While China may not have a seat at the negotiating table, US officials tell NBC they expect the Chinese to spy on the historic meeting. Source say China could use a range of techniques from recruiting waiters and other staff to become informants to deploying sophisticated electronic surveillance at summit meeting sites. Last year, a top US official working in China repeatedly had trouble with his hotel key card. When he brought it back to the US, security personnel found a microphone embedded inside. Raising concerns that next week's Singapore summit could become a high stakes spy versus spy battle ground. Former officials say that China now poses the most sophisticated counter intelligent threat to the US of any country. American diplomats heading to Singapore will be taking unprecedented defensive measures to guard against high-tech surveillance at the summit. Hoda and Savannah wow! Alright Andrea, thank you.
