Good evening, I am Jeff Glore. We are gonna begin here with hurricane Florence. The head of National Hurricane Center put it bluntly today, this really scares me. Florence is huge, nearly 300 miles wide, it is dangerous, it could bring a storm surge of up to 13 feet and wide spread flooding and it is heading for the east coast. A category 4 with 140 mph, it is likely to make landfall Friday in North Carolina. Hurricane and storm surge warnings are up along the coast of both Carolinas. More than a million people from South Carolina to Virginia were ordered to evacuate. We have a team of correspondents in the hurricane zone. But we are begin here with WBBM Chicago meteorologist Megan Galros.

This is a force of nature, Jeff! We are talking about a massive cat 4 out in the Atlantic right now. It's expected to run into warmer waters, may even potentially get close category 5 set, at some time tomorrow. And we are likely looking at a landfall along Carolina coastline, some time first half of the day on Friday.
