I am Anne Marie Green with a look beyond this morning's headlines. It's the story of a woman, a man and a plane. The plane brought them together to make history while often keeping them apart. Here is Carter Avins.

The B-2 stealth bomber is one of the most feared aircraft in the world, able to fly undetected into enemy territory. Lieutenant Colonel Jennifer Avery was the first woman to fly one. "Honestly, I never thought I would be a pilot... I just never thought. I was very kind of insecure in high school" But she overcame that insecurity and earned her Air Force wings in 1997. Then she heard there was a search for B-2 pilots. "And so, I decided to throw my name in the hat! You didn't set out to blaze a trail for women? No, no, actually I didn't! I just applied because it intrigued me."

She got the job, but there was a problem. It meant she'd have to leave her boyfriend John, also an Air Force pilot, and move to the B-2 base in Missouri. "Is that why you apply to be... that, that had somethings to do with it. But, uh, it's obviously an incredible airplane. But that had a significant role in the decision process" So they both became B-2 pilots and eventually, husband and wife. Another first in Air Force history, but it also meant they could never be in the same plane. "You're not allowed to fly together if you are married"

Jennifer went on to fly a mission in Operation Iraqi Freedom. She is still the only woman to fly a B-2 in combat. "Why do think more women don't go after these jobs. There could be a perception problem that they think they won't be accepted" The couple eventually flew B2s for Air National Guard until they both retired from the military in September, giving them more time to focus on the ultimate mission: Their two children. "I have ultimate respect for her because I know that she's an incredible pilot, but I know that she's an even better mother" They'll always have that connection to that exclusive club in the sky. Carter Avins CBS news, Boise, Idaho.
